Course Description. A study of the place and nature of the moral life in the Hindu, Buddhist, Confucian and Taoist (Daoist) traditions. Classical sources will be supplemented with works by selected modern adherents focusing on contemporary problems. Comparisons with western perspectives will be made throughout but especially in examining a contemporary issue or issues. Issues this term will include: a global ethic, non-violent conflict resolution, individual and society, foundations for an ecological ethic, and creativity and morality.

Attendance and Expectations. Students will be expected to attend each class prepared to participate intelligently in the discussions. NOTE: keeping up with the reading assignments will require discipline and effort. First, there is a fair amount of reading and so good time management will be important. Second, you will be unfamiliar with most of the material so you cannot afford to fall behind and “cram.” Writing-to-learn assignments (see below) will Evaluation.

(1) The writing-to-learn assignments. These assignments are meant to help you in understanding new and challenging material, to prepare you for the lecture and discussions, and to encourage you to keep up with the readings. The instructor will give the class a question to answer pertaining to the reading assignment. This one page assignment will be either a take-home or in-class exercise. If composed at home, the work must be yours only and will be turned in at the beginning of the next class. Assignments will be graded with either an “S” or a “U”. At the end of the semester, if you receive an “S” on 80% or more of your papers, your final grade for the course will be raised one notch (ex. B to B+). Between 60 and 79%, your final grade does not change. If less than 60% are “S,” your final average grade for the four papers drops one notch (ex. B- to C+). If you are absent you receive a “U” if a writing assignment is given in class. There will be no make-up writing assignments with exceptions due to illness, etc.

Plagiarism will result in a "U" for that particular writing assignment as well as a lowering of the student's final grade by one level (e.g. C to C-). A second instance of plagiarism will result in a failure for the course, a mark on one's permanent record, and a chat with the Dean.

(2) Papers: Writing to Demonstrate Understanding. There will be four essays, all of equal weight. You should be prepared to: generalize from the particulars learned, apply what has been learned in theory to concrete problems, and compare what has been learned to things already known.
(3) Participation. Everyone is expected to enter into classroom discussions. The level and quality of participation could influence one's final grade, especially if one is on the borderline.

Electronic Devices. Please: No texting, sexting, twittering, tweeting or twirling. Shut off cell phones. If you use a laptop for notes, refrain from other uses.
